Dear Nick Mag,
In your August 1995 issue, on your list of Record-Setting Rooms, you forgot to include the Grand Hotel on Mackinac Island, Michigan. It has the longest front porch in the world!

Michelle E., age 11
Irving, Texas

Dear Michelle,
It's grand of you to tell us about it.

Dear Nick Mag,
Why did you move from the 50th floor to the 41st?

Jennifer M., age 11

Dear Jennifer,
A 500-pound gorilla wanted our seats.

Dear Nick Mag,
I really want to be in your magazine. I'm willing to do just about anything, even travel to Australia!

Emily P., age 11
Belle Vernon, Pennsylvania

Dear Emily,
You can quit packing—you've made it!

Dear Nick Mag,
I think you should make a Nick show that stars Zelda Van Gutters. I'll even write it, no extra charge!

Beth H., age 12
Dallas, Texas

Dear Beth,
What do you mean by "no extra charge?" Have we been paying you for something?

Dear Nick Mag,
Do you read all the entries for your "Say What?" How many entries do you get on average?

Amanda S., age 12
York, Pennsylvania

Dear Amanda,
We get an average of 3,500 "Say What?" entries per issue, and we read every one. A lot of them use the names John and Marsha. We don't know why. Do you?

Mummies!

R

On Halloween, you might see a few mummies wandering in your neighborhood. But if you want to find millions of mummies, go to Egypt.

For about three thousand years, from 2600 B.C. to the late 300s A.D., nearly every person in Egypt was mummified. Baboons, birds, mice, snakes, crocodiles, and grasshoppers were mummified, too. The ancient Egyptians made so many mummies that in the late 1800s, they were burned as train fuel and used for fertilizer.

Mummy-Making 101

A mummy is a dead body that is specially preserved. Conserving the body was important to ancient Egyptians because they believed the souls of dead people used their bodies in the afterworld. The first Egyptian mummies were made naturally, when sun and desert air combined to dry out bodies buried in the sand. Later, Egyptians found a way to mummify bodies using natural substances before burying them. These are called artificial mummies.

The mummy of Ramses II, Egyptian King (1292-1225 B.C.). In circle, Ramses close up. Peppercorns were packed in his nose to keep its shape.

Pass The Salt!

It took 70 days to make an artificial human mummy. First, embalmers (the people who made mummies) removed the lungs, stomach, liver, and intestines, and placed them in jars. These jars were later buried with the mummy. Then the brain was removed and thrown away. (Ancient Egyptians thought the heart was the seat of knowledge, so it was often left in the body.) For the next step, natron (a type of salt) was poured over the corpse. Natron helped remove all the water from the body. After that, strips of linen were wrapped around the body, followed by bed-size sheets. Finally, the mummy was placed in a sarcophagus (a stone coffin), and put in a tomb.

HUNTING MUMMIES

R

Egyptologists are people who specialize in ancient Egypt, so they're experts on mummies. We spoke with Egyptologist Dr. Emily Teeter (below), Assistant Curator of the Oriental Institute Museum at the University of Chicago.

Nickelodeon Magazine: Are you scared of mummies?

Emily Teeter: No. We have some in our storage space in the basement, and I go down and talk to them, even the ones that are unwrapped.

NM: What are you scared of?

ET: I don't like going down into the deep dark tombs, especially the one of Queen Hatshepsut in the Valley of the Kings in Egypt. I'm ashamed to say that I chickened out. The path into it is very steep and it doesn't have stairs. It's just an incline. As I went down, the ground was crumbling and rocks were falling from above. There was dust so I couldn't see, and bats were flying around. Some tombs can be very dangerous.

NM: Is there really a curse on King Tut's tomb?

ET: There is no curse on King Tut's tomb. However, there are curses on some tombs. They aren't very common. You'll see written on the side of a tomb wall something like, "Anybody who violates this tomb, he shall be seized by the neck like a bird." But these were just to scare away robbers. You won't die. The stuff in the movies about people dying because they opened up King Tut's tomb is made up by Hollywood.

NM: What is the coolest thing you have ever found?

ET: In a crate in the basement of the Oriental Institute Museum, I found a beautiful statue that was once covered in gold. I was able to identify it as a statue of Amunhotep, son of Hapu, one of the most famous doctors in Ancient Egypt.

(Top): The Pyramids at Giza.
(Middle): The Great Sphinx guarding the royal cemetery at Giza.
(Bottom): Dr. Teeter and a temple guard in Luxor.

NM: What's your favorite mummy joke?

ET: "Why would a mummy never take a vacation?"

NM: Why?

ET: "Because he might relax and unwind."

Hey, Mummy, is that my lunch?

Some facts about mummies

- Mummies were sometimes found with extra bones, which turned out to be the remains of the embalmers' lunches.
- The word mummy comes from the Arabic word for bitumen, mummiya. Bitumen is a kind of black tar that was used to cover many mummies in Egypt.
- Since mummies are mostly just skin and bones, they are very light. A five-foot-tall wrapped mummy weighs only about 30 pounds.
- The oldest known mummy was found in Egypt. He is 5,000 years old, and still has toe-nails, fingernails, and red hair.
- The ancient Egyptians experimented with other methods of mummification. Alexander the Great, who died far from his home, was preserved in honey until he could be brought back to Alexandria, Egypt, to be buried.
- In just one cemetery in Egypt, four million bird mummies were dug up.
- King Ramses II's mummy was sent to France in 1977 to treat its beetle infestation. The passport for the mummy listed the occupation as "King-deceased."
- King Psusennes' mummy wore 22 bangles on his arms, and 27 rings on his fingers and thumbs.
- Natural and artificial mummies have been found in Australia, Denmark, Japan, New Guinea, Peru, and Syria.

And I dug up 3,998,847 of them.

Is Your House Haunted?

Everybody thinks a haunted house looks like the one below. But maybe ghosts prefer something simpler and more inviting. Like your house, for instance. To find out if your home is haunted, try our Haunted House Checklist. Put a check next to each sentence that's true for your house.

- ___ The dog runs around in circles, or the cat chases objects you can't see.
- ___ Weird smells come from the bathroom.
- ___ The time keeps flashing on the VCR.
- ___ An eerie grayish-green ring appears on the inside of the bathtub.
- ___ Bread sometimes pops up from the toaster before it's done.
- ___ Your neighbors are strange.
- ___ Running water gets hotter and colder even though nobody is turning the knobs.
- ___ Mail comes to your house addressed to somebody named "Occupant."
- ___ The picture on the TV screen has ghosts.
- ___ Strange patterns appear on the ceiling at night.
- ___ Cookies seem to disappear.
- ___ The phone rings, but nobody is on the other end.
- ___ The TV remote control is rarely where you last saw it.
- ___ You're constantly hungry.
- ___ Socks mysteriously disappear in the washing machine.
- ___ Nobody in your house wants to eat liver.

TRULY GRIMM TALES

Many of the fairy tales we know have been told for centuries. In the early 1800s, the German brothers Jacob and Wilhelm Grimm collected hundreds of them. Some stories were scarier than the versions told today. Here are the parts that are usually left out.

SLEEPING BEAUTY

The Nice Version

A princess pricks her finger on a spinning-wheel spindle and goes to sleep for a hundred years. A handsome prince finds her in the palace, and gives her a kiss that wakes her up. The prince and his well-rested bride live happily ever after.

BRIER ROSE

The Grimm Version

While the princess sleeps, brier hedges grow to cover the castle. Many brave princes try to break through to save "Brier Rose," but they are caught in the thorny bushes and die a painful death. One special prince finally succeeds.

By Guy Maxtone-Graham

CINDERELLA

The Nice Version

Cinderella wants to go to the royal ball but she hasn't got a thing to wear. Her fairy godmother appears, gives Cinderella clothes and a coach, but warns her that her outfit will last only until midnight. Cinderella goes to the ball and dances with the prince, but runs off early, leaving a glass slipper behind. The prince searches for the one whose foot fits into the slipper. Every girl tries, including Cinderella's wicked stepsisters, but only Cinderella's foot fits. The prince and his small-footed bride live happily ever after.

CINDERELLA

The Grimm Version

Instead of a fairy godmother, a little white bird gives Cinderella her clothes. When the prince comes around, her stepsisters want to fit into the slipper so badly that one stepsister cuts off her own toe to help her foot fit, and the other cuts off her own heel. Later, two pigeons peck out the stepsisters' eyes on Cinderella's wedding day.

SNOW WHITE

The Nice Version

The Queen (Snow White's jealous stepmother) commands a hunter to kill Snow White and return with her heart. He can't bear to kill the girl, so he brings back a boar's heart instead. But the Queen's magic talking mirror tells her that Snow White is alive, living with some dwarves. The Queen, in disguise, goes after her with a poisoned apple. Snow White takes a bite and collapses. She appears to be dead. Later, a prince comes along and kisses her. She wakes up and the prince and his lively bride live happily ever after.

SNOW WHITE

The Grimm Version

The Queen asks the hunter to bring back Snow White's liver and lungs, rather than her heart. He brings back a boar's liver and lungs, which the Queen eats. The prince finds Snow White, but she doesn't wake up from a kiss. She comes back to life because his servants trip while carrying her glass coffin, and she coughs up a piece of apple. At the big wedding, the Queen must wear a pair of red-hot iron slippers and dance until she falls down dead.

RUMPELSTILTSKIN

The Nice Version

A poor man lies to the king. He says that his daughter can spin straw into gold, so the king locks her in a room to do so. A little man appears and agrees to spin the straw into gold, but demands her firstborn child in return. The king marries the girl, and she becomes queen. When a child is born, the little man comes for it. The little man tells her she can keep her child only if she guesses the man's name. Someone hears him singing a song that reveals his name, and tells the queen. When she guesses the right name, Rumpelstiltskin gets really mad.

RUMPELSTILTSKIN

The Grimm Version

When the queen guesses Rumpelstiltskin's name, he gets so upset that he rips himself in two.

OR I'LL SQUIRT!

Most people like a good scare on Halloween, but animals frighten each other every day of the year. They have to scare off creatures who want to eat them, and they also need to defend their territory from members of their own species. How do animals spook each other? And how do they react when they're afraid? We found out...

Bombs Away!

The bombardier beetle (right) scares off its enemies by using sophisticated chemical warfare. With a "pop!" it squirts two different chemicals from its glands. Each chemical alone is harmless, but when they mix, they create an irritating, boiling-hot spray that drives off foes.

I Play Ruff

The Australian frilled lizard (right) has a long ruff of skin around its neck. It's usually flattened down, but when it senses danger, the ruff opens up like an umbrella, making the lizard look large and threatening, which totally freaks out its attacker.

Don't Look at Me Like That!

The spicebush swallowtail caterpillar (right) has to defend itself from hungry birds. It can tuck its head under its body, so that two spots on its side make it look like the head of a big snake. The caterpillar also has two tiny orange horns behind its real head that smell awful.

Tough Puff

A puffer fish (below) doesn't swim very fast, but then again, it doesn't really need to. When confronted by a possible predator, the puffer fish fills itself with air or water, inflating to three times its normal size. This fake-out makes it look threatening and difficult to swallow.

Stick It To Them

The twig caterpillar (right) actually looks like a twig, and when it senses danger, it acts like one, too. It holds a stiff pose, sticking out from the limb of a tree, just like a real branch. If a predator touches it, the caterpillar falls to the ground and doesn't move.

Want to play fetch?

WHEN THEY'RE SCARED

Don't Blink, Or I'll Stink

Young stinkbugs (above) react to danger just as you'd expect—by getting together and raising a stink. After their mother abandons the nest, they ward off danger by clumping together in a circle around their egg shells. This action intensifies their funky smell and unique color pattern, which lets predators know they should pass by the nasty-tasting insects.

Get The Point?

The hedgehog (left) has quills, similar to those of a porcupine. When attacked, the hedgehog rolls up into a ball so that it's protected by a solid wall of these pointy bristles. This not only protects it, but can also help it get food. For instance, after a snake gets exhausted and injured from trying to attack it, a hedgehog will unravel and eat the snake.

Playing 'Possums

When the opossum (above) faces danger, its first reaction is to hiss and bare its teeth. If that doesn't work, it simply passes out cold. Most predators will then leave it alone, preferring not to eat an animal they think is dead. Contrary to popular belief, the opossum isn't "playing dead"—the sudden fright throws it into a real state of shock.

Charge It!

The electric eel (right) can grow to eight feet in length.

When threatened, an eel can discharge up to 550 volts of electricity. That's enough to kill a small animal, stun a man, or even knock down a horse.

MANIC MOTT'S DAY

MOTT'S DAY!

MONDAY MORNING, MOM Woke Me UP AND I COULDN'T get going. So I Decided to TURN Monday INTO MOTT'S Day. First, I grabbed a quick cup of ORIGINAL FLAVOR MOTT'S APPLE SAUCE to get charged up, got DRESSED, got fed, got BRUSHED, got LUNCH, got the BUS, got to CLASS...

I gave Teach

A RASPBERRY, the Newest flavor from MOTT'S, (a little variation on the Apple for Teacher thing), and it was so good she said "CLASS dismissed."

So I went to the PRINCIPAL'S office, gave him some STRAWBERRY MOTT'S and He got so Happy, he did three Back Flips out of the office and told Me I could have his Job. So I extended LUNCH time so everybody could take a CINNAMON MOTT'S DESSERT BREAK.

CLASS DISMISSED

Everything was going well. So I treated myself to a NATURAL MOTT'S (I'm an Earthy kinda guy). After School, just to round out the day, I shoveled some Mixed Fruit MOTT'S into my face which gave me just enough energy to PLAN the ALL-DAY Teacher-Student WATER BALLOON BATTLE I'd RUN DURING my second day as Principal.

The Gromble's Guide to the Gruesome: All Scares Are NOT Created Equal

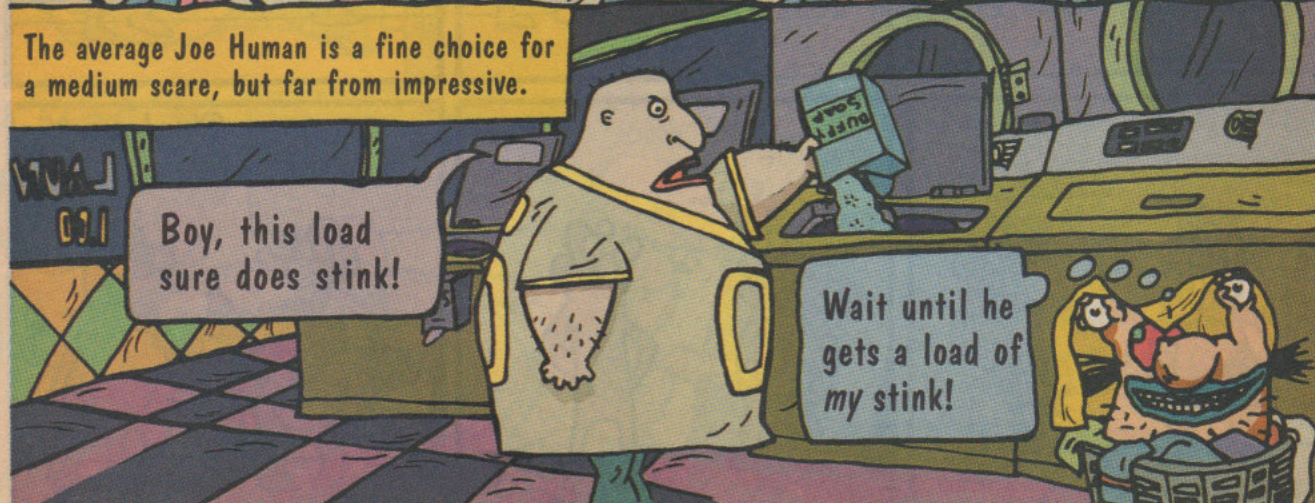

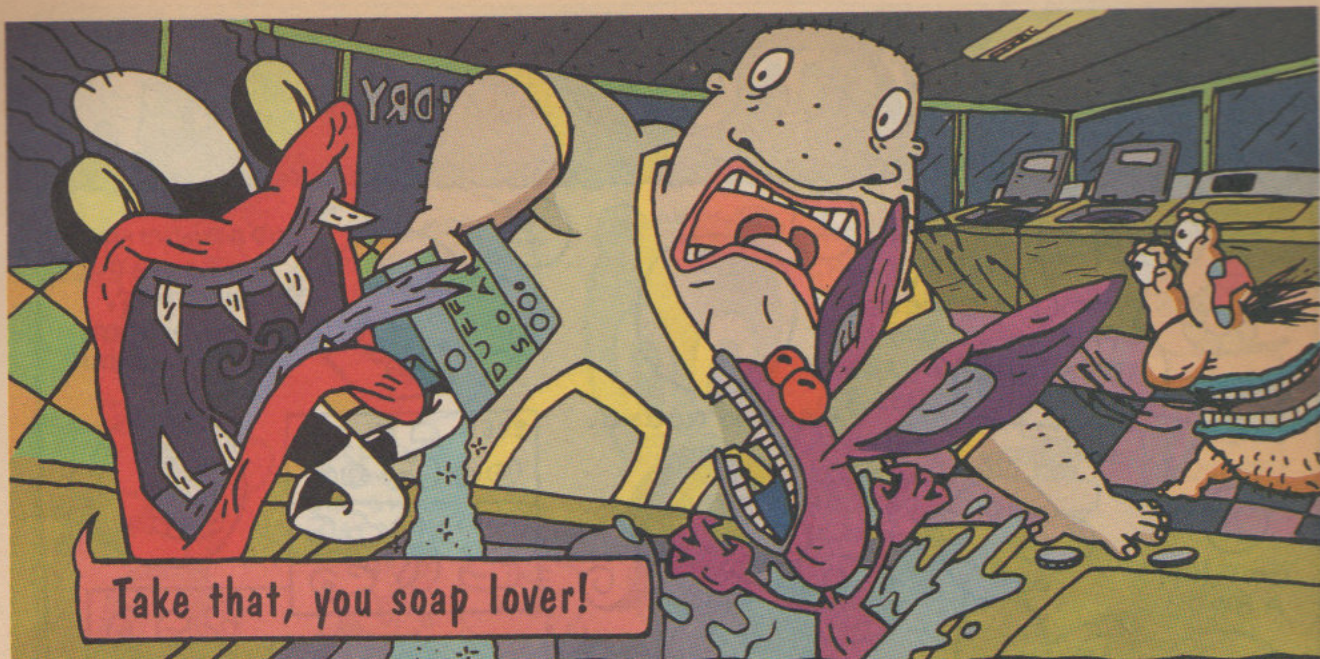

Listen up, my slippery sludge-sippers. If you want to graduate from the Monster Academy, you can't stick to easy scares. You must learn how to frighten those who are not easily freaked.

Freshmen may begin by scaring baby humans. They are nervous and easily spooked.

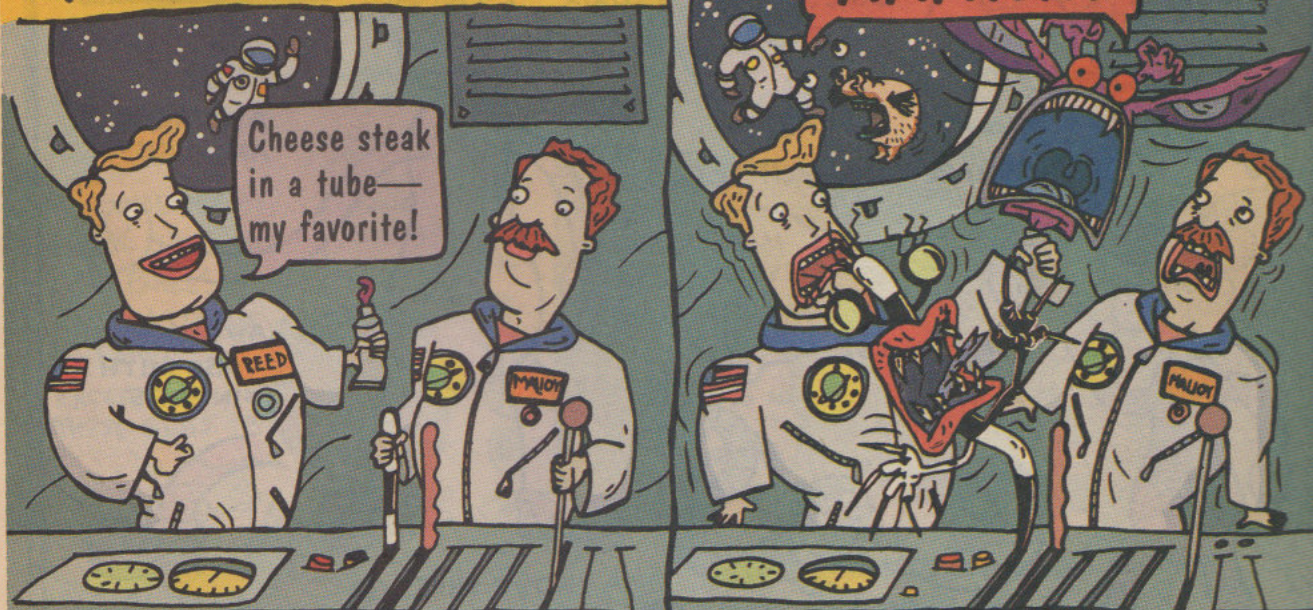

The average Joe Human is a fine choice for a medium scare, but far from impressive.

Take that, you soap lover!

But to graduate with horrors, you must scare the toughest, bravest humans of all: the astronauts!

RUFFING IT

Featuring Zelda Van Gutters, NICKELODEON MAGAZINE's Roving Reporter

Zelda meets young Teddy Shagpaw, a new reporter on his first day at Nickelodeon Magazine.

Zelda is giving Teddy a tour of New York City when...

Following their instincts, Zelda and Teddy hop a plane to Italy in search of the Statue of Liberty.

MEANWHILE,

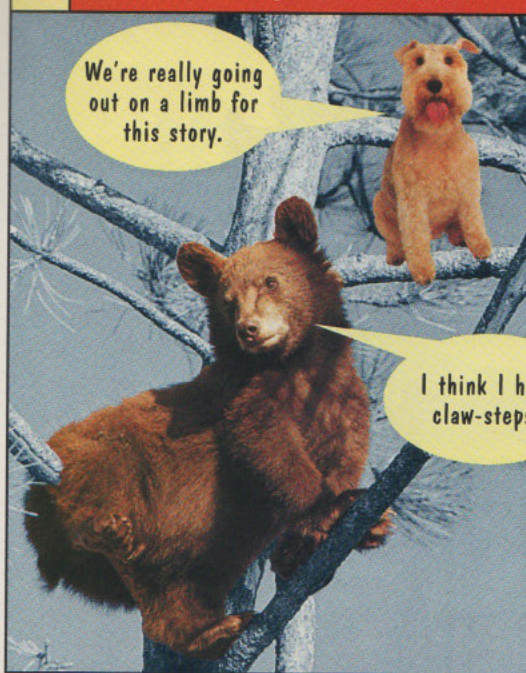

on the ocean below, the bandits sail eastward.

Bear with me, Teddy. If the Leaning Tower of Pisa is in New York, then...

After arriving in Pisa, Italy, and alerting the police, Zelda and Teddy wait for the criminals.

The rascally raccoons bring Lady Liberty to her new home.

The police nab the bandits.

Back at the magazine, Zelda helps a pooped Teddy write up the story.

8

That afternoon, the mayor of New York and the fearless furry reporters witness the return of the Statue of Liberty. But there's a small problem.

This adds a whole new angle to the story.

The BIG Help

What is The Big Help?

The Big Help is Nickelodeon's campaign to encourage kids to volunteer and make a difference in the world.

How can you help big?

Clean up a local park, visit the elderly at a nursing home, organize a food drive—or do just about anything helpful.

Last year, nearly 5 million kids across America pledged more than 31 million hours of volunteer time. Kids did a variety of things to fulfill their promises. Many of them said they enjoyed it so much, they ended up working more hours than they had pledged. Almost everyone said they were inspired to do more volunteer work in their community.

How to be a part of The Big Help

1. Tune in to Nickelodeon on September 30 and October 1 for The Big Help-a-thon. You'll have the opportunity to call a toll-free number and pledge volunteer hours.
2. Get ready for October 21. That's The Big Help Day, when kids will begin to fulfill their pledges by helping out in their communities. Look for volunteering suggestions on Nickelodeon.

Do you need some help?

Here are some suggestions for volunteering:

1. Pick a project that interests you—that way, you can help out and do something you like at the same time. For example, if you are good at math, you could tutor some kids who have a hard time with it; if you like being outside, volunteer to clean up a park.
2. Decide what you want to accomplish, and keep it simple. If you can sum up your goal in one sentence—such as “I want to mow lawns for elderly neighbors”—you’re more likely to achieve it.
3. Make a plan. Write down each step involved in your activity.
4. Ask for help. Think about people you know who might want to join in, such as brothers and sisters, parents, teachers, or friends.
5. If you want to get the support of more people, call your local newspaper or TV station and tell them what you’re doing. They might do a story about your volunteer work.

If you want more information on how to participate in Nickelodeon's Big Help, write to:

Are You Afraid of the Dark?

Cheryl Family dared to go behind the scenes at Are You Afraid of the Dark? to discover the secrets behind the show's special effects and stories.

In the episode called "The Tale of the Midnight Ride," a headless horseman travels over a bridge and mysteriously explodes. It's mysterious, until you find out many of the special effects are done with computers.

To create the image of the horse exploding into thin air, many different images were filmed:

- the bridge alone
- a horse galloping over the bridge
- trees, water, and the bridge, brightly lit
- a fire
- an explosion

These five different shots were loaded onto a computer, where the images were "stacked" on top of one another to create the spooky scene.

FRIGHTENINGLY SIMPLE

"Some of the cooler effects are really very simple," says Steve Kullback, who supervises the show's special effects. "If I want to make an actor disappear, we set the camera down and film him or her sitting at a desk. We don't move the camera. We just turn the camera off, make the actor get out of the shot, turn the camera back on, and poof—the actor is gone."

To create the effect of a rope coming alive and wrapping around someone, the crew first ties the rope around an actor, and then films the rope being pulled off. The film is then run in reverse, so it looks like the rope is actually spiraling around someone.

NO CLOWNING AROUND

When they're not concocting special effects, the people who work on the show can be found conjuring up scary story ideas. One of the show's creators, D.J. MacHale, says that many story ideas come from classic ghost stories. Other ideas come from what scares the people who work on the show. "The one thing in the world I'm not afraid of is the dark, which is probably why I called the show what I did," laughs MacHale. "But when we had a scene with snakes, I couldn't go in the room. And clowns scare me, too. In one episode, when the actor put on the clown make-up, my palms started sweating!"

Are you afraid of this ghost?

Look Ma, no head!

See your dentist twice a year.

Clowns are no laughing matter.

A Recipe For FEAR

NICKELODEON MAGAZINE asked Are You Afraid of the Dark? make-up artist Annick Chartier to let us in on some of her secrets. Here are three of Annick's creepy concoctions that you can mix up in your own kitchen.

BLOOD

Dribble it down your arm, or out of your mouth for a ghoulish look. Be careful where you make this, because food colorings stain. If the blood gets onto something, be sure and rinse the area with water immediately! It will wash off your skin with soap and water.

Ingredients

- 2 1/2 tablespoons water
- 65 drops of red food coloring (or a bit more if needed)
- 10 drops of yellow food coloring
- 2 drops of blue food coloring
- 5 1/2 tablespoons corn syrup
- Optional: food flavoring, such as vanilla or orange

Directions

1. Mix all the food coloring and water together.
2. Slowly add the corn syrup, until a blood-like consistency is reached.
Test it by letting the liquid run down your arm.
3. If you're using the blood near your mouth, add the food flavoring.

➔ MAKE SURE YOU GET AN ADULT'S APPROVAL BEFORE YOU TRY ANY OF THESE SPECIAL EFFECTS. THEY CAN BE VERY MESSY. AND REMEMBER, THESE AREN'T FOR EATING.

HAIRY WARTS

Ingredients

- Peppercorns
- Corn syrup or eyelash glue
- A few short pieces of hair cut from a paintbrush, or bristles cut from a broom
- Non-toxic water colors

Directions

1. Apply a peppercorn to your hands or face, using the corn syrup or eyelash glue. Hold very still for a minute or two to let the syrup or glue stiffen.
2. Dip one end of the hairs from the paintbrush/broom in the syrup or glue, and put them on the peppercorn, so it looks as if the hair is growing out of it.
3. Dab brown, red, or even green and yellow paint on the peppercorns for a truly ghastly look. Let dry.

NICKELODEON
magazine

SCABBY SKIN

Ingredients

- Cornmeal
- Corn syrup
- Water colors, or any available make-up (Reds and browns work best.)
- Powdered gelatin (With an adult's supervision, follow the instructions on the box to turn it into a liquid. Be sure it's cool, but still liquid, before you use it.)

Directions

1. Apply a thin coat of corn syrup to the skin in the shape you want the scab to be.
2. Cover the corn syrup with a thick coating of cornmeal. Let it sit for a minute or two, then carefully tap off the excess cornmeal.
3. Color the cornmeal with paints or make-up. This will make the area look really scabby.
4. Using a paintbrush, apply the cooled gelatin liquid gently over and around the scab. Let it dry. (The color from these scabs can come off fairly easily onto your clothes, or your parents' favorite couch—so be careful!)

Ask The Boss Lady

Where you ask the president of Nickelodeon, Geraldine B. Laybourne, anything you want.

What was your best Halloween costume?

An angel costume. My sisters were angels, too, and my brother was a Wise Man. My mom made us have our picture taken, and used it for a Christmas card. All my friends laughed because they knew that my sisters and I weren't exactly angels.

What kind of candy do you give out at your house on Halloween?

I try to find unusual things to give away, like plastic spider rings, or other creepy things. I also give chocolate candy. (That's what I like best!)

Do you have any questions about smells, good or bad, for the Boss Lady? She'll answer some in a future issue. Send them to:

THE CORNY TRUTH

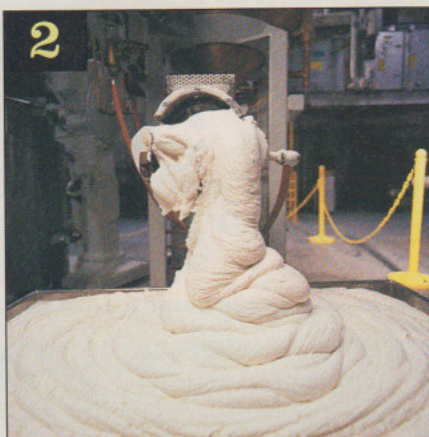

How Candy Corn is Made

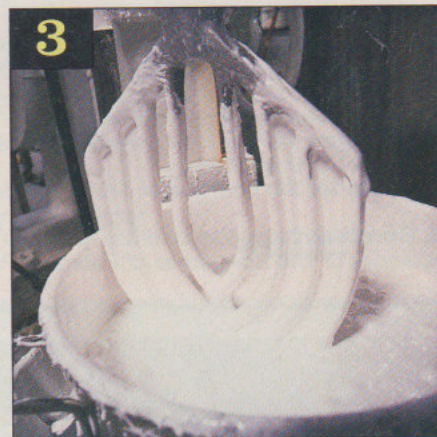

Halloween wouldn't be the same without candy corn. In fact, 20 million pounds of it are sold at Halloween. NICKELODEON MAGAZINE visited the Herman Goelitz Candy Co. factory in Fairfield, California, to see how it's made.

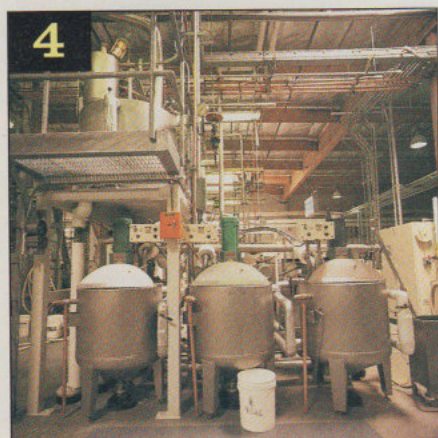

1 The ingredients (sugar, water, and corn syrup) are mixed in large vats to create what is known as a slurry.

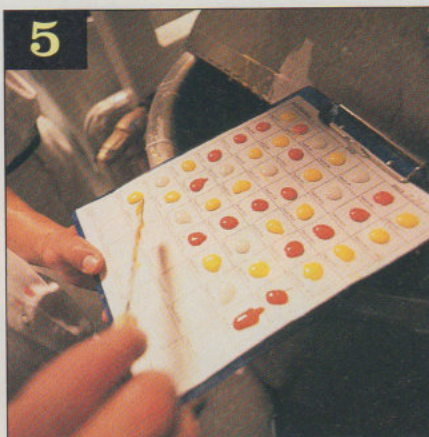

2 The slurry is then whipped into a fondant, which is very similar to the icing on a cake. Butter and vanilla flavorings are also added.

3 Marshmallow is poured into the mixture to make it look and taste creamier.

4 The batch is divided into three separate parts and dyed orange, yellow, and white.

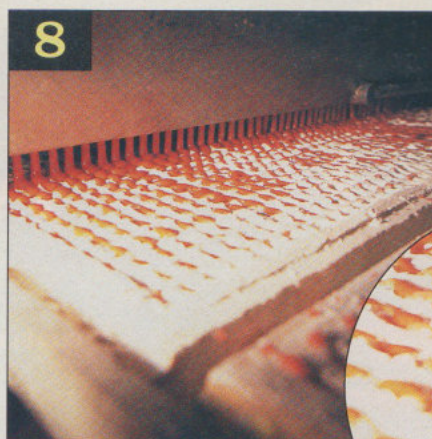

5 The colors of the candy are then tested to make sure all the candy corn made at the factory will look the same.

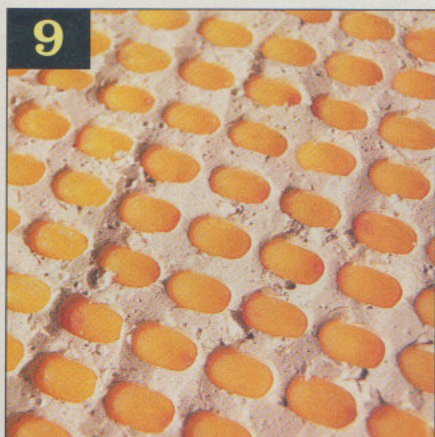

6 Gravity pulls the mixture into hoppers, like this one, which are on the floor below.

7 Candy corn molds are pressed into trays filled with a corn starch mixture. The corn starch makes the candy hold its shape.

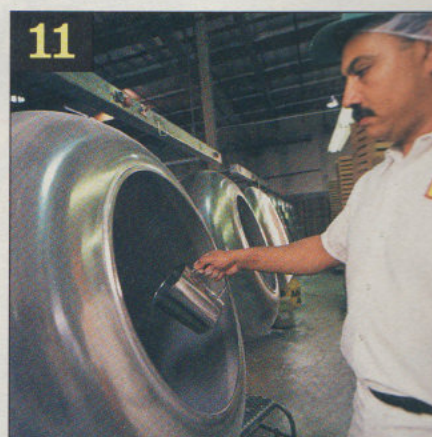

8 The trays are placed on a conveyor belt and filled with the candy which is still in a liquid form. First a white tip, then the orange middle, and finally, the yellow bottom are injected into the molds.

9 The liquid quickly solidifies in the molds and becomes candy corn. The factory produces 37,350 pieces of candy corn per minute!

10 The trays are stacked on top of one another, and taken to the drying room to harden overnight.

11 After the candy is popped out of the tray, and the corn starch falls away, the candy corn is placed in a rotating drum. Lac glaze is added to protect it from damage. (Lac is a safe, natural product made from the secretions of an insect from Southern Asia!) This glaze is also known as confectioner's glaze, and is used in all sorts of candy.

You're ^R Out!

(Of Style)

By Andrew Santella

Ever wonder why baseball teams dress the way they do? Well, for one thing, you can't play baseball without any clothes on. There are rules against that.

But over the years, some team uniforms were so bad that no uniform at all might have been an improvement. Here's a look at baseball's all-time worst-dressed list.

← 1976 Chicago White Sox

The White Sox were the first team to wear Bermuda shorts, but the look lasted only one game. Fans didn't like it, and neither did the players, who scraped a few knees trying to slide. No team has worn shorts since.

1936 Cincinnati Reds

In the 1930s, when baseball teams started playing at night, the Reds introduced bold colors that would look good under the lights. Their uniform included bright red pants, and they called it the Palm Beach look. It was soon washed up.

1906 New York Giants

The prize for poor sportsmanship in uniform design goes to the Giants, who decided to advertise their 1905 World Championship on the front of their jerseys for the entire 1906 season. Instead of the team's name, the shirts read "World's Champions." When they failed to win the pennant that year, they had to return to their old, more humble look.

← 1978 San Diego Padres

These brown and gold uniforms looked a little too much like the outfit of a burger-flipper at a fast-food restaurant. Fans who didn't like this look didn't have to wait long for another; the team changed their uniform again the next season.

← 1975 Cleveland Indians

Over the years, the Indians have had some great uniforms. This was not one of them. For three seasons, the team sometimes wore red shirts and red pants at away games, perhaps trying to scare other teams into thinking they were battling giant tomatoes.

← 1963 Kansas City A's

It may not look radical now, but this green-and-gold look shook up some baseball uniform traditions. Before this, most teams wore only gray or white. But the colorful A's didn't stop here—later they added yellow socks and white shoes. They kept the style after they moved to Oakland. When they started winning championships in the early 1970s, suddenly they didn't look so weird.

1975 Houston Astros →

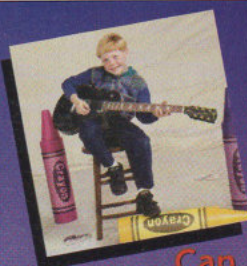

This out-of-this-world look included a star on the front, a sun on the back, and orange stripes. It may be the spiciest uniform of all time.

If I had to wear these outfits, I'd go on strike.

In this season of tricks, here are a few all-time classic hoaxes.

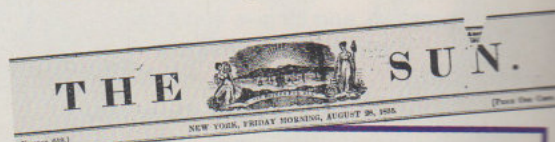

JUMBO BUGS

"Giant Grasshoppers Invade Butts Orchard East of City." That was the headline on September 9, 1937, in the Tomah, Wisconsin, Journal. The story said that three-foot-tall grasshoppers were hopping around a local apple orchard. They were so big, the paper reported, they were snapping off tree limbs. Photographs showed men hunting them with shotguns. It is believed that A. L. Butts, a local farmer, and B. J. Fuller, the newspaper's editor, made up the story. Careful readers noticed that the last paragraph suggested the story was fake.

BUG EYES:
A.L. Butts and friend in a trick photograph.

LIFE ON THE MOON

In 1835, many people read that flying, human-like creatures had been discovered on the moon. Richard Adams Locke wrote in The New York Sun that a British astronomer, using a powerful telescope, had spotted the four-foot-tall creatures. Thousands of people believed the stories. Missionary societies even wanted to travel to the moon to convert the aliens. Finally, Locke admitted he had made it all up.

What a numbskull.

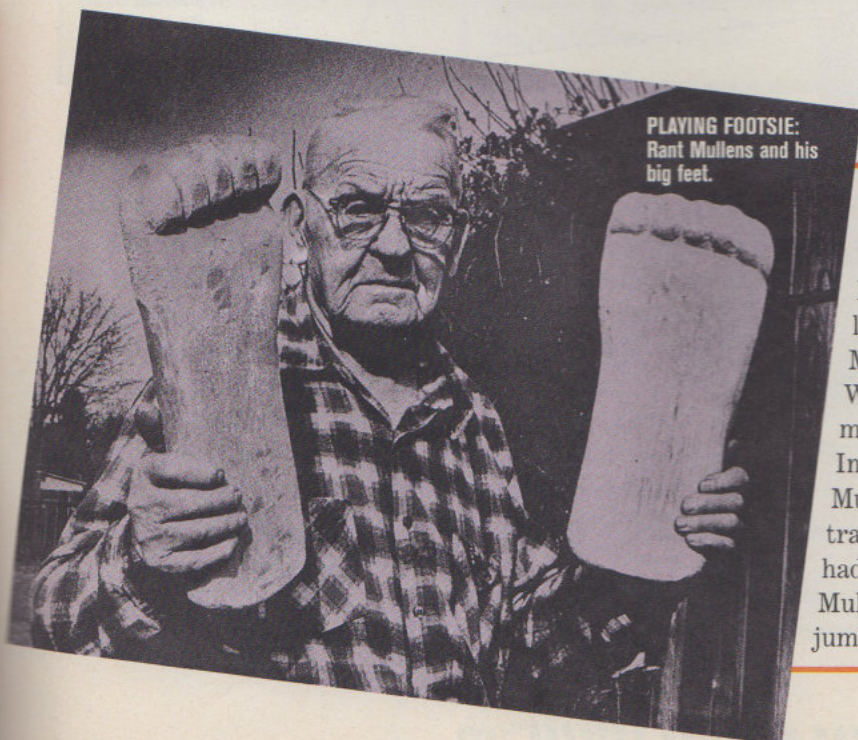

TO BE OR NOT TO BE?
A model of the skull
Dawson made.

SKULLDUGGERY

When Charles Dawson discovered pieces of a skull in 1911 in Piltdown, England, scientists went wild. After they put the pieces together, the skull was like a modern human's, but the jaw was ape-like. This made some scientists think that a missing link between humans and apes had been found. The news was so important that scientific texts were rewritten, and museums updated their displays to include the Piltdown Man, as he was called.

People believed that the Piltdown Man was real until 42 years later, when two men proved that the skull and the jaw were from two different time periods. Also, although the skull was human, the jawbone was from an orangutan. Dawson had tricked people. He had filed the teeth to make them look human. He then aged the bones chemically, buried them in a gravel pit near Piltdown, and pretended to discover them.

PLAYING FOOTSYE:
Rant Mullens and his big feet.

STRANGE FEET

Beginning in 1928, hikers began finding large, mysterious footprints in the woods of Mount St. Helens, in the state of Washington. People believed they were made by Bigfoot, the legendary hairy beast. In 1982, an 86-year-old man named Rant Mullens claimed he had been making the tracks by using a big pair of wooden feet he had carved. After strapping them to his shoes, Mullens ran through the forest, leaving the jumbo footprints behind.

ALIEN ATTACK!

On Halloween eve in 1938, panic swept across America when millions of people heard a CBS radio newscast that said Martians were attacking Earth. In fact, it was only a radio drama based on an H. G. Wells story, "The War of the Worlds." Listeners were told three times during the broadcast that the story was not true, but that didn't help. In New York City, people ran through the streets trying to escape the Martians they believed were about to arrive. Farmers who lived near Grovers Mill, New Jersey, where the Martians were supposed to have landed, rushed out with guns to shoot the aliens.

A REAL SCREWBALL

On April 1, 1985, Sports Illustrated magazine reported that the New York Mets had discovered a new pitcher who could throw a 168-mile-per-hour fastball. (Until then, the fastest pitch ever recorded was 103 mph.) The story also said that the amazing player, named Sidd Finch, was born in England and wanted to be a French horn player. Finch also spoke Sanskrit, and wore a hiking boot on his right foot when he pitched. He seemed too good to be true. Many readers believed the story, but two weeks later Sports Illustrated announced that it was an April Fool's joke by writer George Plimpton, and that Sidd Finch never existed.

HERE'S THE PITCH: Sidd Finch as he appeared in Sports Illustrated.

Whatever You Want

Say What? From the June/July issue:

We asked you to tell us what the three people in the photo were thinking and saying. Here are our favorite entries:

Man: Hey! We're in my iced tea!

Woman in boat: Help me out of this lemon!

Other woman: I have shrunk them, but I've shrunk, too! This is impossible!

*Alfredo B., age 10
Chicago, Illinois*

Man: I don't care. I will prove that I can win!

Woman in boat: I think this staring contest has gone too far.

Other woman: Let's get moving! The tide will go out!

*Drew K., age 10
Clifton, New Jersey*

Man: See, I told you this hollowed-out banana would work.

Woman in boat: Yes, but do you think Mr. Kong will mind?

Other woman: Hmm, should I tell them a 50-foot-tall gorilla is coming this way?

*Tommy N., age 12
Pomona, New York*

Man: Your lemon meringue pie makes a great boat.

Woman in boat: You're right. I'm glad my crust is thick. I wouldn't want to fall through a soggy crust.

Other woman: Uh-oh! The crust is soggy.

*Jennifer R., age 10
Manville, New Jersey*

Design-a-Ride Contest Results

From the June/July issue:

We asked you to design an amusement park ride. Here are our winners and honorable mentions. The three winners each received Nickelodeon Videos, Gak, Floam, a T-shirt, and other great Nickelodeon stuff.

WINNERS

The Hot Dog Factory

The ride where you are the hot dog!

There are five buns on the ride.

1. You get strapped into a big bun that sits on a conveyor belt.

2. You get squirted with ketchup and mustard.

3. You get dumped with sauerkraut.

4. You get dumped with pickle relish.

When you get off, the bun travels back to the beginning, so another person can get on. It's fantastic! And everything washes out!

*Sarah L., age 11
Pearl River, New York*

The Giant-Size Figure Skate

It stands 16 feet tall and spins around on a giant ice-skating rink. If you can't stand the spinning, then you will hate this ride when it jumps in the air and spins three times. People can rent skates and skate around the giant skate. Holds up to three people comfortably.

Chantel C., age 11
Laguna Beach, California

WINNERS

1. You get on a roller-coaster-like cart. Then you enter a room, and your aunt comes in and says, "Oh, you are getting so BIG!" She is, of course, a robot.

2. You go up on the track and straight down. Then you're in a room with a door labeled "Bathroom." A child's voice says, "Uncle Louis!" and you hear a scratchy voice from the bathroom saying, "I'll be out in a minute!"

The Family Reunion Roller Coaster

3. You go up again and enter a room where there's a man wearing a tacky jacket. He says (with open arms), "Aren't you gonna say hi to Uncle Skippy? How does this jacket look?"

4. You go down into Grandma's bedroom. Granny is knitting some booties and tells you, "Watch out or I'll get you with this needle. Ha, ha, ha!"

5. You go up again and it looks like you're outdoors. All your relatives are there and they say, "Oh, he looks so CUTE!" Then you drop straight down and you land back on the track which takes you out.

Shannon B., age 11
Willard, Missouri

HONORABLE MENTIONS

The Yo-Yo

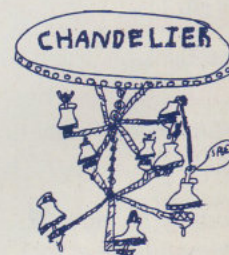

The Yo-Yo is a ride in which people sit, strapped securely in a sphere. A retractable pole is attached to the sphere on one end and the finger of a giant hand on the other. The pole moves like the string moves on a yo-yo. The sphere goes up and down, around in a circle, and straight out. The ride also does yo-yo tricks such as Walking the Dog and Around the World.

Titalola S., age 14
East Orange, New Jersey

Stuck in a Chandelier

It's like a Tilt-A-Whirl, but shaped like a chandelier. At night, it lights up. It goes really fast, but won't give you whiplash.

Lauren H., age 9
Hartland, Wisconsin

The Anthropomorphic House

My amusement park ride is an anthropomorphic house, a house in which everything has a life of its own. All the appliances and furniture are controlled by a remote control (which is also alive).

Anna S., age 13
Champaign, Illinois

In our September 1995 issue, we credited Carolyn Jones for the photos on page 16. Those photos, along with the ruler that appears throughout the issue, were actually taken by Cathy Crawford. We also forgot to credit Naomi Spellman for QZ on page 61. And we should have mentioned that the photo of the Umimmak School on page 11 was taken by Nick Newbery.

So there I was first time on the highest of high dives, my friends hangin' out down below.
Boy was I Nervous.

I mean I didn't want to end up being pool-side pizza.

Then
Cap'n Crunch shows up
with my favorite cereal,
Cap'n Crunch's
Peanut Butter

NOTHING
CAN STOP ME
NOW!!

That in your face
peanut butter taste and the Cap'n gave me all the confidence
I needed.

No fear here!
I did a total freefall.
